Objection to the papers was then withdrawn; and the Attorney-General read the requisition of Gov. Hagood, of South Carolina, upon Gov. Cobb, of Alabama, and Gov. Cobb's warrant for the arrest of Whites. But it was evident that these papers did not change the aspect of the case. Mr. Whites had been arrested in Alabama by virtue of these papers, and these papers had been issued upon a warrant sworn out before Trial Justice Carlisle by David Hipp. But the Hipp warrant had never been returned to the Trial Justice, and Whites was not confined upon that, but upon the State Treasurer's warrant. So the affidavit to support the warrant was still wanting; and the Attorney-General asked for an alias warrant. The Solicitor made the affidavit charging breach of trust and embezzlement; upon this the Trial Justice issued his warrant; the Solicitor handed it to the Sheriff, and the Sheriff made the arrest upon it. The hearing of the Habeas Corpus proceeded, but no new points were developed. It was very evident that both sides and the Trial Justices were convinced of the unconstitutionalty of the act under which Whites was restrained of his liberty. The effort of the State was to impress upon the minds of the Judges that this was too grave a question for them to decide; the effort of the other side to impress the Judges with their importance and to make them think that they were equal to any question, constitutional or otherwise.

The argument having been concluded Mr. Packer at once declared the act unconstitutional on the two grounds argued in behalf of the prisoner, and thought the prisoner entitled to his discharge. Mr. Carlisle said, that while his view of the act agreed with Mr. Packer's, he did not believe that a Court constituted as the present had a right to discharge the prisoner. The Trial Justices failing to agree the prisoner was remand. ed.
